"Reseña del editor For months the sun has burned down on Lila's Kenyan village. It is too hot to gather firewood, too hot to weed the garden, even too hot to milk the cow. Without rain the well will run dry and the crops will fail. Lila is so worried that when her grandfather whispers to her the secret of rain, she decides to go and talk to the sky herself. How Lila saves the village by telling the sky the saddest thing she knows is told in David Conway's elegant and spare prose style, which is complemented perfectly by Jude Daly's beautiful and poignant illustrations. Biografía del autor David Conway was born in Ireland but moved to England as a baby, and has lived here ever since. He currently works at home, bringing up his daughter and son, and writing for children. His poetry has been published in many anthologies, including Loose Change in association with War on Want. David lives in North London. Jude Daly was born in London and emigrated to South Africa as a young child. She went to art college in Cape Town, and now lives there with her husband, the writer and illustrator Niki Daly, and their two sons. Extracto. © Reimpreso con autorización. Reservados todos los derechos. One night Lila over heard her mama talking about the well that had dried up and the crops that were failing. ""Without water there can be no life,"" Lila heard her mama say. Lila wanted so much for the sun to stop shining and for the rain to come. But the sun did not stop shining and the rain did not come. One evening Lila' grandfather told her a story about a man that he'd met once when he was a boy - a man who had told him the secret of rain. ""You must climb the highest mountain,"" said the man to Lila's grandfather, "" and tell the sky the saddest thing you know."
